Update received from Rathlin

Rathlin Energy (UK) Limited (“Rathlin”) and project partners now believe that the West Newton project represents a significant oil and gas discovery rather than a pure gas discovery as originally thought.

Evaluation of the West Newton A-2 open hole data has identified an estimated gross hydrocarbon column of approximately 65 metres in the Kirkham Abbey Formation.

Initial petrophysical evaluation identifies a gross oil column of approximately 45 metres underlying a gross gas column of approximately 20 metres within the Kirkham Abbey interval.

With the indication of a potentially significant oil column, the Extended Well Test (“EWT”) has been temporarily suspended in order to review and revise the well test design to deliver the necessary test information to validate this potentially important onshore resource.

Following the integration and evaluation of the core, petrophysical, seismic and test data, the Operator and partners intend to commission a revised CPR to re-assess volumetrics and revise NPV10 values based on the information acquired from the West Newton A-2 well.
